Hyunda Crisis Is Settled Seoul Intervenes.

Gains Provisional Workers' Accord

> By Susan Chira New York Times Service

ULSAN, South Korea - In a dramatic reversal, employees of the leading conglomerate in South Ko-rea agreed Tuesday to end two days

The temporary settlement of South Korea's most serious labor dispute was reached with the help of a top government official. It was the first time the government has intervened during the recent wave of labor disputes.

The conflict at Hyundai erupted after management locked out workers from six factories on Mon-

The dramatic confrontation at Hyundai was one of the stiffest tests yet of the government's new commitment to democracy.

Hyundai is a symbol of South Korea's economic might, and the specter of violence by its workers has prompted tough government reprisals in the past.

The founder of the group and honorary chairman, Chung-Ju Yung, is a tough disciplinarian who has always resisted unions.

To help resolve the standoff, the deputy labor minister, Han Jin Hee, flew to Ulsan on Tuesday night, met with Hyundai officials and representatives of the city's police department, and then put the plan before workers who were rallying at Hyundai's sports stadium.

The government promised to rrge Hyundai to raise wages by Sept. 1, to try to have the company recognize unions elected by the workers, and to encourage both labor and management representatives to negotiate directly in Seoul with Mr. Chung.

It is not clear what Mr. Chung's attitude is toward the settlement. He has resisted negotiating with the new union that some of the workers have chosen and has held out for negotiations with other new unions that workers believe are dominated by management.

But he has said that he would delegate authority in negotiations to the heads of the Hyundai companies. Senior Hyundai officials See KOREA, Page 2

Hess's Death Apparently Was Suicide

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BERLIN - The British authorities said Tuesday that Rudolf Hess. the former deputy to Hitler, had died after wrapping an electrical cord around his neck.

Hess, 93, died Monday in a British military hospital near Spandau Prison in West Berlin. He had been serving a life sentence for way crimes during World War II.

Hess had grown increasingly depressed toward the end of his life. The official statement said he went into a hut in the prison garden Monday afternoon and a few minutes later was found by a guard with the cord around his neck.

Attempts were made to revive him and he was taken to the nearby hospital, where he was declared dead at 4:10 P.M., the announcement said.

It said an autopsy was being conducted to determine whether the suicide attempt was the actual cause of death.

Hess attempted suicide at least twice before, in 1959 and 1977. Officials said Hess's body would

By Neil A. Lewis New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Senior U.S. envoys to the five Central American nations have been told they should convey Washington's deep concern about the regional peace plan adopted Aug. 7 in Guatemala, Reagan administration officials

The principal concern, officials said Monday, centers on U.S. dis-trust of the Nicaraguan govern-ment and whether it would abide by any agreement it makes.

We don't think any of these people need to be convinced that Sandinistas cannot be trusted." a State Department official said. Elliott Abrams, the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, led the discussion Monday as more than 30 officials analyzed

Mr. Abrams has described the accord as "more a preliminary agreement than a final peace trea-ty" and has cautioned that it contains many ambiguities.

But even as administration officials repeated their wariness that the plan adopted by Central American leaders might help the Sandinist government, there were signs Monday that the plan had also caused problems for the Nicaraguan government

Diplomats said President Daniel Ortega Saavedra of Nicaragua recently telephoned President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica, the principal architect of the peace proposal, to explain why he trav-eled to Havana immediately after the accord was signed.

The diplomats said Mr. Ortega had complained that he had to get the approval of President Fidel Castro to ward off pressures from hard-liners in his own government. "He said his purpose was to strengthen his internal position," said one official. Mr. Ortega was also seeking Mr. Castro's agreement to withdraw Cuban forces from Nicaragua to comply with the accord's provisions that all foreign forces eventually be withdrawn from the region. the official said. After the Ortega-Castro meeting, a communique was issued in which Cuba expressed its support for the

The Reagan administration, which had earlier offered its own peace plan for the region, has been forced to confront instead the accord that was signed by Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras and El Salvador.

The administration is making an interise diplomatic effort to assess the accord and to shape it to its liking.

The envoys are to return to their postings on Tuesday to relay the U.S. concerns before the foreign ministers of the five countries confer the next day in San Salvador.

De Andrade, Brazil Poet, Dies at 84

The Associated Press RIO DE JANEIRO - Carlos Drummond de Andrade, 84, a poet who was a leader of the modernist movement in Brazil, died Monday after a heart attack.

Mr. Drummond de Andrade was considered Brazil's most important contemporary poet. He was known as the first poet to use a contemporary and specifically Brazilian lan-guage, breaking with the restraints of Portuguese classical literature.

But despite his insistence on using contemporary language and metaphors, Mr. Drummond de Andrade also insisted on the need for a vision of the past, arguing in one of his many journalistic articles in Brazilian publications that "man make it up," whereas the AFL-CIO

Unions Urge Rejection of Judge Bork

By Edward Walsh

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The AFL CIO, accusing President Ronald Reagan of an attempt at "ideologi-cal court packing," has urged the Senate to reject Mr. Reagan's nomination of Judge Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court.

In a four-page statement, the ex-ecutive council of the largest U.S. labor federation said Monday that Mr. Bork's record and career "make it plain that he is a man moved not by deference to the democratic process, nor by allegiance to any recognized theory of jurisprudence, but by an overriding commitment to the interests of the wealthy and powerful in our soci-

It added: "His agenda is the agenda of the right wing and he has given a lifetime of zeal to publicizing that agenda. That is the stuff from which his nomination was made and that is what requires the Senate to refuse its advice and con-

The AFL-CIO's position was expected, but it added a potentially powerful lobbying force to the coalition of liberal organizations that are opposing the Book nomination. Rex Hardesty, a spokesman for the federation, said that planning would begin immediately for a "no-holds-barred battle" by organized labor against the U.S. Appeals Court judge.
One union, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, has already contributed $40,000 to the anti-Bork cifort, Mr. Hardesty noted.

The last time the labor federation actively opposed a Supremo Court nomination was in 1969 and 1970, when it was part of the coalition that defeated President Richard M. Nixon's nominations of Clement F. Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell to the high court.

Ralph G. Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, which is coordinating the campaign against Judge Bork, said the AFL-CIO decision was "enormously consequential."

He said organized labor was "especially effective on the grass-roots level. We expect it to make a critical difference, as it did in opposing Haynsworth and Carswell.

Patrick McGuigan, an official of Coalitions for America, a conservative lobbying group that supports the Judge Bork's nomination, said the AFL-CIO's opposition was very discouraging.

"Once again, the leadership at the highest level of the AFL-CIO has shown it is increasingly out of touch with rank-and-file workers," Mr. McGuigan said. He said that missiles with considerably more than battlefield range. While the United States and the Soviet Union have cooperated effectively to slow the spread of nuclear weapons, they have made no parallel attempt to deal with missiles. Last April America joined six allies to restrict the sale of missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads. That was an important initiative, but the Soviets have not yet joined it. In any event, not all of the Third World is dependent on other countries' help.

Senator Dan Quayle, a Republican from Indiana who is drafting legislation to improve control of missile exports, recently asked the Congressional Research Service to bring up to date its inventory of developi countries' progress in the field. India, which has launched two satellites with its own rockets, is by far the most advanced. But Brazil, as the CRS describes it, is a more disquieting case. It has a large, sophisticated aerospace and arms industry; unlike India, it has made itself a major exporter of armaments. Its two largest customers for military hardware are Iraq and Libya. The CRS notes "persistent rumors" that Libya has in turn been shipping some of its Brazilian weapons to Iran.

In the Third World, the development of Brazil's wide-open export policy is taking military missiles is progressing rapidly. Israel has a formidable arsenal of missiles. several of them capable of carrying nuclear warheads. One missile was tested last spring over the Mediterranean at a range of more than 500 miles. South Korea has evidently begun production of a surface-to-surface weapon based on adaptations of its U.S.supplied Nike air defense missiles.
The world properly devotes vast attention to the arms control negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. Less wisely, it does not bother to take much notice of the arms races under way elsewhere in the world. They are proceeding with little re-straint by arms control agreements except in regard to nuclear weapons — and the countries most proficient in building missiles are usually the same ones that have refused to sign the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Hess Leaves Questions

The death of Rudolf Hess closes two thick black books. One concerns Germany. Rudolf Hess, Adolf Hitler's deputy and a founder of the Nazi Party, took it on himself in May 1941 to parachute into Scotland in what Winston Churchill called a "frantic deed of lunatic benevolence." According to the British, Hess came only to propose peace with Germany.

The other volume concerns the Soviet Union. Stalin was certain that Hess was trying to enlist Britain in the impending German invasion of the Soviet Union. At Nuremberg in 1946, Hess was found guilty of crimes against peace, but not guilty of crimes against humanity. Moscow, however, ordered the Soviet judge to reverse himself and demand Hess's execution for crimes against humanity in occupied Poland. Soviet anger over Hess never abated. All pleas for commutation were rejected. This meant that from 1967 until his death at 93, Hess spent his time in cell No. 7, the only inmate left in Spandau prison, the fortress in West Berlin that remained under four-power control. "I am glad not to be responsible for the way in which Hess has been and is being treated," wrote Churchill in 1950. "He came to us of his own free will, and though without authority, had something of the quality of an envoy. He was a medical and not a criminal case, and should be so regarded."

World War II cut deeply into the Soviet Union's flesh; Nazi crimes further explain the harsh Soviet attitude. Hess was no bit player but an architect of Hitler's Reich. Still, the Soviet relentlessness over Hess contrasts with the Soviet silence over Kurt Waldheim. Moscow has yet to utter a peep about Mr. Waldheim's concealment of his service as an officer in Hitler's brutal Balkan campaign. An obvious difference is that Hess was a powerless symbol, and Mr. Waldheim is president of Austria.

Such contrasts are not limited to the Soviet Union. After the war, the Western democracies winked when it was in their interest to recruit former Gestapo thugs like Klans Barbie, or German rocket scientists. The death of Rudolf Hess ends the medical case, but not the moral questions.

Burden on the Sandinists

Last weekend the White House recovered a bit from a fit of nerves induced by conservative attacks on its Central America policy, and reaffirmed the president's pledge to House Speaker Jim Wright to wait at least until Sept. 30 to request more contra aid. The attacks had been launched out of a general fear that, in seeming to subordinate the Reagan-Wright peace plan to the softer Arias plan adopted two days later by Central Americans, President Reagan stumbled into an abandonment of the contras. Specifically, critics feared that between Sept. fact remains that, for whatever reasons and 30, when the U.S. fiscal year brings aid to at no small cost to his standing with love an end, and Nov. 7, when a cease-fire and constituents, Mr. Reagan has reached out democratic reforms are supposed to take to the congressional opposition and is deeffect under the Arias plan, the contras laying a bid for more contra aid in order to would wither on the vine. The specific apprehension may be somewhat allayed by recognition that the contras can be sustained in the October interval by up their politics and settle the region supplies that have been stockpiled, by checks already in the mail or perhaps by humanitarian aid. Still, the fear remains that, as little as Reagan-Wright currently appears to offer to the contras as a military force, the Arias plan offers less. This explains the alarm felt among ardent contra backers inside and outside the administration, It explains the hesitation in Mr. Resgan's embrace of the Arias plan, which, since it has all the Latins' signatures and Reagan-Wright has none, inevitably became the principal diplomatic vehicle. It may also explain the untimely dumping, just as negotiations quickened, of chief negotiator Philip Habib, an old pro whose single discernible "fault" was his identification with the task the president had assigned him. This last incident will deepen some people's suspicious of the president's commitment to talks. Still, he deserves some forbearance. The signals are mixed, but the improve prospects for productive talks.

The main burden rests on the Sandin-up their politics and settle the region down, and they must be held to it. They should, for instance, immediately allow La Prensa and the radio stations to reopen, They should not repeat what they did the other day in using truncheous and dogs to break up a small demonstration. Mr. Reagan has Congress keeping a wary eye on him. The Sandinists should have the whole hemisphere's wary eyes on them.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

A String of Resignations

Resignations speak louder than explanations. A State Department spokesman strained all credulity in explaining the resig-nation of Philip Habib, the president's special Central American envoy. Given the peace initiative by regional leaders and the peace plan worked out between President Reagan and House Speaker Jim Wright, the spokesman said Mr. Habib "has decided that this is an appropriate moment for him

The words must have stuck to the spokesman's mouth like peanut butter. It is inconceivable that Ambassador Habib would choose this pivotal moment, just when diplomacy is finally showing promise, to return to private life. He is a 40-year diplomat with the widest respect. By all accounts, he was ready to jump in directly and throw U.S. weight behind the new Central American peace plan. Senior administration officials, with the exception of Secretary of State George Shultz, found him too eager.

Mr. Habib deserved better from President Reagan, whom he served so well in Lebanon. His resignation only adds to the skepticism about administration intentions to seek a settlement in Central America. He is, let it be recalled, the fourth State Department official dealing with Central America to resign in four years.

In 1983, Thomas Enders called it quits as assistant secretary of state for Latin America. He wanted to pursue a two-track policy of supporting the Nicaraguan rebels while trying to negotiate seriously with the Sandinists. This did not endear him to the one-track White House. Mr. Enders, known among Foreign Service officers as a hawk, came to a simple conclusion: not that the Sandinists were virtuous

In 1984, Richard Stone, a former Democratic senator from Florida, resigned as President Reagan's envoy to Central America. Mr. Stone, an ardent conservative, evidentity arrived at a similar conclusion.

but that the contras could not win.

In 1985 came the resignation of Langhorne Motley, a Republican businessman from Alaska who served as successor to Mr. Enders. He also became a little too interested in negotiations.

Resignations are rare in American government. Rarer still is to leave in protest over policy. Mr. Habib, like the others, leaves quietly. But his resignation, taken together with the other three, speaks clearly.

Cuba Revisited: Dedication and Much Failure

HAVANA — For all of revolutionary Cuba's dedication to rapid development, the country today offers scant evidence of substantial hange during the past 20 years. It is not for lack of effort. Now, as in 1967, a visiting journalist is struck by the sense of dedication at all levels of what a Colombian busines touring Havana described as "Latin America's first disciplined society." Clearly, many Cubans have worked hard to achieve the goals that Fidel Castro unfurls, speech in and speech out.

But often the projects rushed along under President Castro have proved unworkable, with correc-Downtown Havana has added tive actions requiring investments on the scale of those made in the original effort. This was my pervasive impression as I returned to Havana, and to the provinces, for the first time since 1967.

The circumstances of such a visit have changed Twenty years ago it was only possible in the company of Communist Party guides, and security forces were ubiquitous. Now, with Cuba trying to revive tourism. I could rent a car and travel unhindered. In this summer of economic adversity, Mr. Castro slipped into his July 26 account of offsetting accomplishments an admission that "yes, we have committed errors." He then proceeded to underline his campaign for rectifying them.

A return look at what were some of his pet projects in 1967 suggests that considerable rectification has already occurred, at a high price in Cuban energies and Soviet-bloc capital, especially in education and agriculture. While Mr. Castro insists that the precepts of the revolution remain word, and Havana has avoided the explosive growth of other Latin American capitals. But the glorious Spanish colonial structures of old Havana, having decayed genteelly for 200 years, are now collapsing, sometimes with loss of life, and Mr. Castro is asking for volunteer labor to build city housing.

building of consequence in 20 years. That rusting superstructure, which was to have been a bank, is now a classy 22-story public bospital — an apt symbol of Mr. Castro's social priorities.

In 1967 the revolution's conspicuous architectural venture was a circular ice cream parlor occupying an entire block. The talk of Havana, it might have alighted from Mars upon the raw earth. The ice cream was watery. Today a canopy of jungle trees envelops that pistachio flying sancer. Blessing the shade, Cubans line up — as for almost all purchases - to buy comes of ice cream that now is quite tasty. However, the increase in production of milk, and hence of ice cream, is one of the few clear advances for the food shopper. One of Mr. Castro's passions 20 years ago was to diversify farming into areas other than sugar. A major prospect was cattle, and my tour then included numerous agricultural stations. Mr. Castro had proclaimed artificial insemination and crossbreeding of Cuba's hump-backed Brahman herds, known here as Zebu, as the key to a future of meat and milk. Young planners asserted that the infu-sion of Holstein genes would mean no more Zebu by 1990. Across the hall, agronomist-planners foresaw the last of the Escambray region's private farmers by about the same time.

Despite relatively large investments, official figures show that beef production has stagnated. The Zebu, though, have proved to be a hardy breed. insists that the precepts of the revolution remain. Banao offered a project worthy of the romance that tinged the revolution 20 years ago: In fields close by low mountains, an all-woman crew of novice farmhands grew grapes (for a Bulgarian wine project), strawbernes and onions in what Mr. Castro supposedly determined was a "microclimate." He meant a zone somehow apt for products not favored in fields nearby. A refrigerated trailer truck waited for enough cartons of berries to justify the 200-mile (320-kilometer) run to market in Havana. Only the onions remain. The grapes were bitter and the berries too costly, recalled an aging member of the current Banao cooperative. The women preferred other work. The garrulous crew chief I remember, the sole man in the project at the time, moved on to a sinecure at the Lenin Park in Havana. Mr. Castro's heralded onslaught on illiteracy took root in the mid-60s through a teacher training program that, in three stages, turned out at least ideologically prepared graduates, some still in their teens. The first stage was conducted high in the Sierra Maestra, where Che Guevara had trained guerrillas - precisely because the site was practically inaccessible. The second stage was almost as high in the Escambray, not far from Banao in a lunge former tuberculosis sanitorium. After the rigors of those stages, the students finished their studies at Havana's Makarenko Institute, named for the Soviet educator who inspired the unorthodox approach. The high-altitude costs of invoking Guevara's shost proved prohibitive. A monument stands on the Sierra Maestra site, a memorial to both schools that once functioned there. The second stage of Makarenko's rocket, the ex-sanitorium, is sev years into another conversion — to a hotel or erhaps a medical center, the workers were not sure. Young teachers today have never heard of Ma-karenko. The framework, if not the content, of teacher training in Cuba is almost embarrassingly conventional. Each province has a teachers' college,

Espionage: When Intelligence Becomes Nonsense

P ARIS — The suggestion has half-seriously been made in London that the Peter Wright "Spycatcher" affair is a politically motivated double-game meant to publicize Mr. Wright's assertion that British intelligence, or a part of it, believed it necessary to investigate whether Harold Wilson, the Labor prime minister, and the people around him in the style has always been more the blow between the eyes than the knife in the back. However, who is to say? The affair has been preposterous enough to suit the wildest explanation.

What is hard to believe is that the attempt to suppress Mr. Wright's book has been the work of reasonable people in touch with the world. Their efforts gave international notoriety to his allegations, making a best seller out of a work that otherwise would have sald a few thousand copies and gone on a shelf crowded with circumstantial accounts of Third, Fourth, and Fifth Men, the whole Cambridge spy set, histories of MI5 and MI6 and biogra-phies of their hitherto nameless chiefs. Even those of us who like this sort of thing are becoming sated.

Mrs. Thatcher says she is trying to stop the book's publication in Britain and Australia as a matter of principle: Those who sign security oaths should be made to keep them. However, the main interest in the Peter Wright story is not its material disclosures but a politico-psychological revelation — the evidence it provides of what happens to people in the intelligence business and of how connections can be lost between intelligence and common sense.

Mr. Wright was a British acolyte of James Angleton, the orchid-grower and sometime poet who became chief of counterintelligence for the CIA and nearly tore that agency apart as a result of his conviction that it, the British services and the other Western intelligence services were deeply penetrated by Soviet spies. He believed in the assertions made in this respect by Anatoli Golitsin, a Soviet defector.

As a result of Mr. Golitsin's interrogation, Mr. Wright and other British officers became convinced that the head of the British security service, Sir Roger Hollis, was a Soviet spy. Mr. Hollis called Mr. Wright into his office in 1965 and said, "Why do you think I am a spy?" Mr. Wright explained that after logically eliminating all the other possible candidates, Mr. Hollis was left. Mr. Hollis replied, "Peter, you have got the manacles on me. I can Americans who have or recently had only tell you that I am not a spy."

Mr. Golitsin not only offered information on penetration of Western in-telligence, but also made startling underground concrete cell with only a light bulb for company and kept there

A Challenge To Restore The Faith

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — The rage on the right over President Resgan's turn to diplomacy in Nicaragua may be a symptom of deeper disquet among conservatives about the state of their movement. As the 1988 election approaches, we are hearing the kind of static in that sector of the political spectrum that usually comes from forces much further to the left.

You had to be deaf to miss the howls of rage over Mr. Rengan's embrace of a "peace plan" advanced by House Speaker Jim Wright. The plan was soon supplanted by a somewhat similar but squishier proposal from five Central American presidents, and the White House, to the further dismay of conservatives, called that a "positive" initiative as well.
"Fiasco," cried The Wall Street

Journal in an editorial entitled "Reagan's Bay of Pigs." Columnist William Safire saw "appeasement." Republican presidential candidates joined in the uproar, with Jack Kempi. saying that the administration apparsaying that the administration apparently has "no strategy to deal with the Soviet threat in Central America." Many Republicans said they believed in the Old Reagan of the "freedom fighters" and the Reagan Doctrine, not this newly minted substitute.

When so many conservatives bail out on Mr. Reagan on this issue, it is a symptom of the decline of his moral authority, even within the Republican Party. Sure, any one of the party's 1988 hopefuls would like Mr. Reagan's endorsement (which he is unlikely to give). But they also sense an erosion of his standing with the conservative activists and a need to tell those folks, who comprise the most important constituency within the party today, that they are prepared to be more principled than the president.

Part of this is the legacy of selling arms to Iran. That act stripped Mr. Reagan of his reputation for cousistency and moral rectitude. It undercut his stated view that the United States should never traffic with terrorists. It left him vulnerable to being "sucok; acced" by a bunch of folks whom conservatives, even more than most other Americans, find obnoxious.

But the erosion of his moral authority has deeper roots. It goes back to his themeless 1984 re-election campaign and the frequent signs of passivity in the face of provocations that his fellow conservatives thought should have stirred him to anger and action.

Disillusionment is the theme of a round table in the September issue of The American Spectator, a favorite magazine of the right, in which eight conservative writers discourse on what the editor, R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr., calls "the coming conservative crack-up." They say hard things about the advertised "Reagan revolution."

In a typical lament, Joseph Sobran, the columnist and National Review editor, writes: "Reagan gave conservatism a beachhead in Washington, but he didn't follow through. For a few seemed about to score a knockout, he ran out of gas and spent the better part of a year trying to rope-a-dope his way through the Iran-contra mess."

Mr. Tyrrell and several others put less blame on the man and more on the movement. Here is Mr. Tyrrell trashing his friends: "The conservatives were not resourceful enough to insulate their president against dissolving into sentifoes. In six years of presidential power, the conservatives never significantly affected the climate of American ideas

... The conservatives have not adapted to an era that is moving beyond the problems of the early 1980s."

It galls these writers that in a heavily delegated presidency Mr. Reagan has chosen three successive chiefs of staff -- James Baker, Donald Regan and Howard Baker - who have no roots in the conservative movement and no commitment to its future. It angers them even more that they are plagued by what Ernest van den Haag calls "habitually cliquish and sectarian ... divisiveness" in their own ranks.

Some of this rhetoric is probably just the seventh-year itch. The realization is sinking in that Mr. Reagan is a nearing the end of his second term and that most of his achievements are behind him. But it is more than that, When President Reagan muddles the message, as he did by selling arms to the ayatollah and now by seeming ready to subordinate the contras' cause to a negotiated settlement in Nicaragua, the morale of his most ardent supporters suffers.

It looks as if the first challenge facing Ronald Reagan's would-be Republican successor is to restore a sense of confidence and coherence to the conscivative activists. That may be tougher than anyone supposed.

Obviously, Washington does not have to reveal any still-secret movement of ships and troops. By this time, undisclosed military movements presumably have been made to prepare for the possibility of larger-scale warfare. Given the perils, that would be the militarily re-

Whatever It Is, It Still Makes Sammy Run

Q UOGUE, New York — Almost 50 years ago, a 25-year-old Hollywood writer named Budd Schulberg created the fictional model of one of the enduring types, Sammy Glick. The name became part of the language, describing greedy, hing, back-stabbing bustlers stepping on and over foe and friend alike to scramble to the top. The kind of guy, we say, who would sell his own mother.

Mr. Schulberg is 73 now, still writing every day, occasionally taking time to reflect on his 1939 book, "What Makes Sammy Run?" and the character he made, the no-goodnik clawing his way from copy boy to Hollywood producer. "What has happened in America," he asked the other day, "that has so drastically changed our impression of Sammy Glick from dread repugnance to upwardly mobile acceptance, if not actual admiration and emulation?

"The book I wrote as an attack on anti-social behavior has become a howto book on looking out for No. 1."

The narrator of "What Makes Sammy

Run?" described the young man this way: "I saw Sammy Glick on a battle-field where every soldier was his own

ed. the narrator tells Sammy: "You never had the first idea of give-andtake. . . . It had to be you all the way. You had to make individualism the most frightening ism of all."

MEANWHILE

Mr. Schulberg wrote his reflections on the book for Newsday, the Long Island newspaper, which was interested because there is talk of finally making "Sammy" into a film. The timing could not be better, both for the film and for Mr. Schulberg's look back in anger and wonder at what he made.

The writer got his first clue that Sammy was becoming a hero in the early 1970s. He spoke at a local college and afterward a student came up to him and said, "I love him. I felt a little nervous about going out into the world and making it. But reading 'Sammy' gives me confidence. It's my bible,"

"He put out his hand," Mr. Schulberg remembers. "The hand that would be soon kniffing friends and colleagues in the back. I asked myself, 'What have I done?' From the anti-hero of the '40s to the role model hero for the yuppies of the '80s."

"This is a new nation," Mr. Schulberg concluded in writing about the changes over 50 years, "with idealistic individuality contending with selfish individ-ualism ... individualism run rampant, with arrogant disregard for the views and welfare of our fellow men."

Well, not that new, really. Life isn't imitating art: life is just unbalanced around here these days. Selfishness and disregard have become causes for self-celebration rather than self-discipline, "Small wonder," Sammy Glick's cre-ator says now, "that in such an atmosphere a lieutenant colonel in the Marines becomes his own CIA and State Department." Maybe, he said, "they should change the song to 'America, America, God shed his grace on me.'

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tatars and Romanians

One is grateful to the Crimean Tatars for drawing the world's attention, as well as that of the Kremlin, to the forcible mass deportation to Siberia of ethnic groups strictly on political grounds. ("Red Square Protesters Test Official Tolerance," July 27.) The Tatars' plight is desperate. An entire nation some 300,000 strong was scattered throughout beria and faces extinction. Only slightly less dire is the fate that awaits the almost four million Romanians of Bessarabia and northern Bukovina. After incorporating those lands into Soviet Moldavia, in 1940 and again in 1944 Moscow set about creating a new nation. The Moldavians, the regime maintained, were "Romanized Slavs." The Cyrillic alphabet was introduced and all protesters—that is, virtually the entire educated stratum of society were deported to Siberia by various methods. Today there are pockets of increasingly denationalized Romanians in faraway places like the Dnieper valley and the Krasnodar region, and scattered around Siberia as far as the Ussuri River on the Siberian-Chinese border. The inhabitants of the Moldavian Soviet Republic are constantly told that they are the descendants of a Slav tribe, the Volohi, and that they were liberated by the U.S.S.R. from oppression and denationalization by the Romanians.

In Defense of Jobert

Michel Jobert ("Now Comes a German Swing to the East," July 8) has rarely been proved wrong. If Louis François-Poncet (Leners, Aug. 4) read the papers carefully he would find that many of Mr. Jobert's ideas are now coming out of the mouths of others who lacked his foresight. In any case, my German friends and I found Mr. Jobert's article on Germany first-class. JONATHAN STEVENSON.

Questions for a Columnist

In response to the opinion column "The Pope and Waldheim: Time Enough to Think" (Aug. 4) by A.M. Rosenthal:

I can agree with the main thrust of Mr. Rosenthal's argument. However, when non-Jewish East Europeans have pointed out that they, too, suffered millions of casualties under Nazism, they have not met with a sympathetic response from the Jewish community. Jews have every right to ask others to stand up with them for the moral right to punish those responsible for the Holocaust. Shouldn't they stand up for the moral right to punish those responsible for Soviet crimes against humanity, in-cluding the artificial famine of 1932-33 that killed seven million Ukrainians?

TARAS KUZIO.

In response to the opinion column "It's Good to See America Practice What It Preaches" (July 28) by A.M. Rosenthal: Mr. Rosenthal has been for many years one of the leading journalists in America. His opinions regarding U.S. foreign policy are all the more interesting in that he has probably had an influ-helped many countries previously under ence in shaping foreign policy.

Since World War II, America has colonial rule to achieve, let's say, American freedom without America's culture and its heritage. Who would say that this practicing abroad of what America preaches has been a success? Doesn't it rather look counterproductive? In many cases, hasn't it amounted to naive meddling, leading to chaos?

M.C. STRICKER.

Rats Before Wildebeests

The senior Kenyan government official who reportedly had wardens chase a herd of wildebeests across his vegetable plantation for the purpose of collecting for damages from the government's compensation fund is not as original as he might seem. ("Battle for Living Space in Kenya," Aug. 4.) Half a century be-fore, when the Chinese government paid bonuses to citizens who joined the battle against a rat plague, rewarding them for each rat tail delivered to the collecting stations, enterprising farmers started to raise rats, while city entrepreneurs imported tails from abroad.

RUDOLF VOLL Hong Kong.

The Army Went In, Too

Regarding the report "Ex-President Chamoun of Lebanon Dies" (Aug. 8):

The writer refers to U.S. Marines deploying to Lebanon in 1958. While it is true that marines did participate in the Lebanon intervention with four battalion landing teams that totaled some 5,600 personnel, the larger role was played by a U.S. Army task force of more than 8,500, which deployed from Europe. It included an infantry anti-aircraft artillery, cavalry, engineers and numerous support units.

The point is not to add oil to the fires of interservice rivalry, but to highlight the first deployment of U.S. Army forces from Europe in support of U.S. policy in the Middle East, and the largest deployment of American troops anywhere between the Korean conflict and the Vietnam War. The operation was infinitely more complex than the landing of marines from ships already on station in the Mediterranean. It went smoothly, stability was maintained and only one U.S. soldier lost his life.

BRUCE H. SIEMON. Heidelberg, West Germany.

Long May They Laze May I express what is undoubtedly a minority opinion (but one, I suspect, with many secret sympathizers) in the debate about French self-criticism of their work habits ("Are the Lazy French" Going Belly Up on a Full Stomach?" July 29). The French work to live, rather than live to work. Hurrah for them and long may they do so! The solution for any economic disequilibrium which may result is for the high-pressure workaholic nations to do likewise.

THOMAS ADALE.

Those Tongues Made Sense

William Safire (Language, June 15) was in error in citing Acts of the Apos-tles 2:3-4 regarding glossolalia (speaking in tongues), although here he simply reflects the ignorance of the so-called charismatics of the Bakker stripe. When battle group, a tank battalion, artillery, Acts refers to speaking "with other tongues" (rendered in some earlier translations as "diverse tongues"), it very clearly means that the apostles spoke in specific languages known to their polyglot auditors.

Verses 9-11 say: "Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judaea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews, and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." They were duly amazed not by incoherent babbling, such as that affected by the tiresome Pentacostalists of today in their mistaken belief that such hysteria manifests a gift of the Holy Spirit, but because these simple farmers and fishermen from rural Palestine had been blessed with a true gift, the ability to communicate in all the known languages of the ancient world. That is the real miracle, and what a splendid thing it must have been to hear.

ROBERT B. BETTS.

Two different sorts of "speaking with tongues" are mentioned in the New Testament. The first instance, at Pentecost, was certainly not a case of "tongues un-known to man," because in a multilingual audience each one heard them speaking in his own language. It was not until later that Paul, in his first letter to the Corinthians, described the modern practice of unintelligible sounds - and advised that if there is no interpreter, the speaker should keep quiet in the church.

A Centennial Message from the International Herald Tribune. OHAL HERALO NOTES ON A CENTURY

Starting to Think Internationally

CENTENNIF The author was chief editorial writer for the IHT. based in New York, from 1967 until be retired in 1979. Previously, he worked for the New York Herald Tribune, joining it in 1937 as a feature writer and assistant editor. In 1940, he shifted to writing editorials fulltime and continued until the paper suspended publication in 1966. He now lives in Brooklyn.

By Harry W. Baehr Of course the 100th anniversary of the birth of the International Herald Tribunc is a most important anniversary this coming October. But for me October brings another and more personal annniversary. Forty years ago, in October 1947, I made my first flight by air across the Atlantic on Air France's first sleeper service - and my first visit to the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune. I had seen, briefly and from the outside, the office of the Paris Herald on the Avenue de l'Opera in 1929. But then I was fresh out of college, Paris was swarming with tourists and other visitors and the Herald was their

By 1947, everything had changed: I was an editorial writer for the New York Herald Tribune, and postwar Paris had very few tourists. With the Europe that was trying to pur itself back together, and the Americans who sought to help and to guard, the Paris edition was beginning its move toward its eventual global status.

The office then was an

World War II and now he was covering the altermath. In the other wing, facing Kerr's office, was that of the European edition's editor, Geoffrey Parsons Jr., whose father headed the editorial page of the New York paper and who had seen much of the war from Britain. He had been London bureau chief from 1943 until the Paris edition reopened in late 1944.

Paris itself was still a place

One result of that was the to eat and to drink - and of course to ralk. And there was much to talk about, of a had altered the paper and its dientele. The association between the European edition and the New York headquarters was much closer than before the war. During the war years of 1940-44 when the Paris operation was closed, there had been much discussion in New York as to how it should be structured when printing reimpressive structure on the sumed. Rue de Bern. In one of the use of New York-written wings was the New York editorials instead (except on Herald Tribune's Paris busome very rare occasions) of reau, then headed by Walter those written in Paris, as had B. Kerr, who had been in Prague when the Nazis took been the case before the war. Another was the dispatch of over there in 1938, covered reporters and editors from the Finnish winter war and New York to staff the Paris was in Paris in June 1940 when the Germans marched edition. I was not the only in. Ken was one of the standout correspondents of October of 1947: Theress Almuch-battered Berlin exander, who edited letters for the New York editorial page, came over, as did Henlev Hill, who served long in many of the top editing jobs.

Much of our discussion revolved about France, of course. Paris had not been badly battered in the war, but in 1947 food, power and francs were still in short supply, and there were black (or at least grey) markets for all of them. We wore overcouts at meetings, had small stoves under tables at meals and burned candles at restaurants world that had changed and at lunch. A transit strike while I was there sent swarms of bicycles flowing over the city, as they had done during the war.

And in this critical time, politics loomed large -Charles de Gaulle had just founded his party — Le Ras-semblement du Peuple Français - and there was much tension over the Communists, both in France and in other parts of Europe.

I made a sortie into Germany, and stayed with Edward Hartrich, the New York Herald Tribune's correspondent in Frankfurt (American headquarters during the Occupation). Here the Communist (or should one say the Soviet?) threat loomed even larger than in visitor from New York in Pans. A one-day trip to still brought me in touch with Geoff Parsons's brother David, who had an airline management job at Tempelhof.

I traveled around the ravaged city and talked to a German businessman who feared the Soviets would try to take over Berlin in the next winter; he thought there would be a war in two years. The Soviets did blockade West Berlin a year later, but the response was an airlift, not an airstrike.

So global problems were a reat source of talk in the Paris Herald — talk in which longtime Managing Editor Enc Hawkins often joined, with memories going back to an earlier war. And, since the Americans in Europe in those days were mostly in the Army or in organizations that tried to cope with the millions of persons displaced by the war and with economies that were still trying to recover from it, Parsons and his scaff sought to write for them, and, in so doing, to begin the journalistic development of what eventually became the International Herald Tribune.

This is the 28th in a series of messages about the IHT which will appear throughout the Centennial year.

The agreement with India, whose troops are enforcing the peace accord, is intended to provide substantial autonomy to Tamils in eastern and northern Sri Lanka. More than 70 people were killed in clashes with the police during three days of rioting by militant Sinhalese after the agreement was signed.

Senator Enrile Is Given a Bitter Welcome

Washington Post Service
MANILA — Juan Ponce Enrile has made his debut as Senate opposition leader in a session that turned into an emotional and sometimes bitter recounting of his powerful role during nine years of martial law government. During a three-hour exchange Monday, several of Mr. Entile's Senate colleagues, many of whom were jailed or forced into exile during his tenure as defense minister under President Ferdinand E. Marcos, evoked memories of nighttime arrests, assassinations and home searches.

One senator accused Mr. Enrile of having behaved "like the good Germans" during the Nazi era, while another asked him whether he would congratulate Mr. Marcos for the assassination of Benigno S. Aquino Jr., a major Marcos political opponent, in 1983.

It was an emotional catharsis for the assembled politicians, some of whom seemed unsure how to receive a man who to them represents a past era of repression and dicta-

Senator Raul Manglapus told how, after the declaration of martial law, soldiers ransacked his house and forced him to remain in exile in the United States.

In the months following the 1986 revolution, Mr. Enrile escaped the kind of attack that occurred Monday largely because he had helped overthrow Mr. Marcos and then stayed on as defense minister in Mrs. Aquino's government.

But it was an uneasy alliance. The president and most members protest against the edicts of martial of her cabinet have never fully law and at the same time invoke trusted the man they bitterly opposed for more than a decade.

It turns out that the factory will stay until 1993, and in the meantime the effluent is to be carried away from Baikal by a 44-mile (71-kilometer) pipeline and mped into the Irkut River.

The pipeline has become an issue, not only because of the pollution threat for the river but because, in the eyes of veteran Baikal defenders, the whole project smacks of an elaborate, expensive ruse to keep the pulp plant operat-ing indefinitely on Baikal's shore.

The answer is a classic in the centralized economy. "That is not within our authority," the minister said. "If they tell us to dismantle the combine, we'll do it. It is not up to us to decide. The recent changes in Soviet soty have at least brought the debates out into the open. For instance, an 'article in Sovetskaya Rossiya on the pollution of Lake Ladoga, near Lennigrad, exposed dangers posed by a cellulose plant (again the property of Minlesbumprom) that was pumping chemicals into Leningrad's drinking supply. The factory had been closed twice by sanitation agencies, but each time it was reopened by the "magic word 'plan," as Sovetskaannals of the Soviet Union's rigidly ya Rossiya put it. After the article and the subsequent outpouring of letters, the plant was closed ar ministry officials were criticized by the Central Committee. In Irkutsk, the city closest to Haikal, the pipeline has become a pe-litical issue. Activists have gathered about 10,000 signatures on petitions. The controversy sparked a spontaneous demonstration by local students and, unusually, a response in the local paper by the Irkutsk party first secretary.

By James Helme Sutcliffe CALZBURG, Austria — Most of the excitement at the 67th Salzburg summer music festival cen-tered around the first Salzburg performance of the Austrian-born Arnold Schoenberg's only full-length opera, "Moses und Aron," 57 years after its two-act torso was completed, and 36 years after the death of its composer-librettist.

Helene Berg, whose husband Alban studied with Schoenberg, would not have been surprised. His second opera "Lulu" (1935) has still not been performed at the Salzburg Festival. When I spoke to Berg's widow in 1969 it had only been a few years since Vienna had irst performed "Lulu" "It's the way Austrians treat all their com-posers," she said. But this took place before the music — sensitively conducted by the Met's James Levine with a keen ear for its most lyrical aspects — had even begun. Only Moses, declaimed with gravity by Theo Adam, was garbed biblically. ## Soft-Focus 'Portraits'

By Sheridan Morley not Herald Tribune

LONDON — Thanks to a campaign of daft vilifica-tion by Kenneth Tynan and lesser hacks during the late 1950s, William Douglas Home has never been given his critical due as one of the most elegant and intelligent comic dramatists of his era. However, when he turns serious, his plays are usually at their softest and shakiest, and his new "Portraits" (at the Savoy) is alas not much of an exception.

The idea of it is intriguing in a club-conversational way: to derive a character study of the artist Augustus John through his dialogues while at work on three of his most famous portraits, those of the soldier Bernard Montgomery, the painter Matthew Smith and the photographer Cecil Beaton, all of whom are played with varying success by Simon Ward while Keith Michel turns John into a socially acceptable cocktail-party bohemian in a big hat.

THE BRITISH STAGE

We also get to meet George Bernard Shaw in a brisk impersonation by Richard Wordsworth, hanled into John's studio to provide some enlivening chat during an otherwise deadly boring sitting with Monty.

But nowhere in this long, rambling, lethargic and meventful play does either Douglas Home or his director, John Dexter, give us much idea of what it is really intended to be about. If it is simply a stage biography of a great artist, then we'd be better off back home creding the Michael Holgoud head about. biography of a great artist, then we'd be better off back home reading the Michael Holroyd book about John. If it is, as I rather think, a play about pacifism and the horror of unnecessary killing that led Douglas Home himself to a noble wartime imprisonment, then we need to know a good deal more than that fear of the atomic bomb left John unable to paint for a while.

The essential problem is that having started off on a play about the artist and war, Douglas Home has become totally sidetracked by minor footnotes on the various characters who invade John's studio to be immortalized on canvas. Thus we get a semi-caricature of Montgomery as the traditional military bully with the heart of gold; a more thoughtful study of Smith (another artist immobilized by the horrors of war when his own sons were killed), and a final, curiously bitchy encounter with Beaton.

In the end "Portraits" is no more than a mildly waspish Madame Tussaud's tour of famous men beyoud the reach of their libel lawyers. The only woman allowed into the studio is Pamela Lane as John's downtrodden model and minder, and whatever Doug-

The trouble is that we, too, are the sitters, but unlike those on stage we don't get the benefit of an Augustus John portrait to take home with us. There are, however, a large number tastefully arranged around Brian Vahey's set, so you could just regard this as a useful summer exhibition and forget the play altogether, which is much what its creator seems to have done.

for Christmas, Lesley Mackie stars in "Bells Are Ringing," while at Sadler's Wells a distinguished cast put some life back into the Vivian Ellis/A.P. Herbert Bless the Bride."

Of these two, "Bells Are Ringing" is the younger by decade, dating from 1956 and scored by the Englishborn Jule Styne in the most successful of his otherwise largely unmemorable Comden and Green musicals. They had just had their greatest success with Leonard Bernstein and "Wonderful Town" (of which this is but a pale echo), and Styne was about to move on with other lyricists to "Gypsy" and "Funny Girl." What locked them in uneasy partnership was their desire to create a show for Judy Holliday, she of the husky voice and nightclub wit.

The one they came up with was a creaking romance about a telephonist who, in the days before automatic answering machines, takes messages for an alcoholic playwright whom she then manages to lead back to the typewriter in time for the traditional final number.

The fact that they got two Broadway years and then Hollywood movie out of this cumbersome whimsy is considerable tribute to the unique and quirky stardom of its original leading lady; at Cheltenham. Les-ley Mackie shakes off the pallid imitation of Garland that won her last year's Olivier award and, without having to imitate the other great Judy, achieves her own kind of stardom in such classics as "The Party's over" and "Just in Time," while Bernard Lloyd plays the drunken writer with a cautious English charm.

John Doyle's loving production needs some first-act ughtening before London, and comes as a sharp reminder of how lucky Broadway was in the late 1950s o have Stephen Sondheim waiting to inject a palpably dying art form with something altogether new and more savage.
"Bless the Bride" is blessed by a Vivian Ellis score.

which still sounds just wonderful, from "Too Good to Be True" through "Ma Belle Marguerite" and "This Is My Lovely Day" to the wistful "Other People's Ba-bies." which he has rightly hijacked from a much earlier show. The setback, however, is the A.P. Herbert book, which has worn very badly indeed and is so fragile in its jokes about the English versus the French that you wonder how it managed to hold its own so triumphantly against "Annie Get Your Gun" and "Oklahoma," which both hit London in the same spring of 1947.

But in a strong new cast both Gerald Harper and Simon Williams manage a suitable grace under pressure, Jeremy Sinden looks like the chairman of a minor Victorian music hall, Ruth Madoc belts out the duenna numbers and all stand back in understandable relief when the romantic leads (Jan Hartley and Bernard Alane) start to get their lungs around the great

This Victorian family album has found a perfect period home among the operettas of Sadler's Wells, and Christopher Renshaw's carefully faithful production leaves no heartstring untugged. The reminder here is that Ellis at 82 is the last great musical bridge from Coward and Novello to Rice and Lloyd Webber.

At the Royal Court Upstairs, Simon Curtis has a curious little revue called "Royal Borough," which starts with the cast of six leading the audience on a lightning tour of Sloane Square. Back indoors we then get sketches by Marty Cruickshank and others aimed at detailing the history of Chelsea and Kensington from the time of Congreve to that of the druggies. But Elsewhere, there is a fascinating chance this week to a ragbag of quotes and ideas and complaints and revisit two long-lost big-band shows which in their statistics about central London life through the ages very different ways represented the ending of eras in offers nothing more than what we already know - it the British and American musical theater. Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange tumbled Tuesday as investors worried that renewed weakness in the dollar would discourage foreign investment in U.S. Just a day after the Dow Jones industrial average breached the 2,700 level for the first time, culminating a week's advance of more than 100 points, the index fell 45.91 points to The bond market was weak as well, providing additional pressure on stocks.

"The weakness in the dollar has to be considered ominous. It threatens one of the market's major supports, that being foreign demand for U.S. stocks," said Michael Metz of Oppenheiтег & Со. Declines led advances by an 11-3 ratio, Vol-ume soured to 200 million shares from the 166 million shares that traded on Monday.

Broad market indexes also slid. The York Stock Exchange index fell 2.64 to 184.12, and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index slid 4.86 to 329.25. The price of an average share

The Hot Spot Comes to TV With Revion's Icebreaker

By ED EEN PRESCOTT

EW YORK — It is a steamy evening. A woman in a strapless dress reclines on a sofa. A man enters the room and rushes to her side. The seduction that follows begins with an ice cube: He traces her face and neck then moves lower. This is an "An Intimate Evening," Revion's new television commercial for its fragrance, Intimate.

To many people in the ad business, the spot — created by Hill, Holliday, Comnors, Cosmopulos changing times. "It did surprise me," said Jeffrey Edelstein, a specialist in advertising law at Hell Dichler ing law at Hall, Dickler, Lawler, Kent & Friedman. Ti was a very sexy commercial. I don't think it would have been acceptable in the early 1980s."

These days, commercials that networks are more willing to negotiate.

are pushing the old limits of "good taste" and in some cases, the networks are revising longstanding rules on standards and practices. Clearance rules at ABC, NBC and CBS are still tougher than those of cable networks, but things are easing up, Mr. Edelstein said.

Network executives argue that there has been no dramatic change in what ads they will approve. But George Dessart, CBS's vice president of program practices, concedes the networks are more more willing to negotiate, because of a more competitive

Today, there are some other alternatives for advertisers who want to be more daring. "There are now some good quality broadcasting options," said Lynne Seid, HHCC's senior vice president. By using some creative strategies — such as buying a combination of cable, syndicated shows, independent stations and affiliates — she said, an advertiser can obtain "a network

ESPITE those options, most major advertisers need network clearance. Without it, Ms. Seid pointed out, an advertiser cannot place ads on stations owned and operated by CBS and NBC in all three top markets, New York Lose Andread and Chinac (Single Property of Street Chine) Angeles, and Chicago. (Since it was purchased by Capital Cities Communications, ABC allows its stations to make their own decisions.) And in the end, most major advertisers want the wide reach of network television.

In 1987, the networks approved certain lingerie ads. Advertisers can now use live models in bra ads, for example, which was taboo before. Playtex did not waste time in taking advantage of the move: An ad for the Cross Your Heart bra, which features a live model, began running by April.

Moreover, although the networks are still taking a hard line against contraceptive advertising, the pressure is mounting to reconsider in light of AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome. All three have freed their owned and operated stations to make their own decisions. Recently, three CBS stations — WCBS in New York, KCBS in Los Angeles and WCAU in Philadelphia — decided to accept condom advertising.

Before 1982, the networks relied mainly on the National Association of Broadcasters Standards and Practices Code. The NAB canceled the code when a portion of it was ruled to be in violation of antitrust laws.

Fragrance and fashion ads have always run toward more torrid fare, but in the new climate, agencies have taken to selling soap, wine coolers and cars with a dose of sensuality. For example, even Colgate Palmolive - which spent $65 million in 1986 on network advertising — is taking a sector approach to selling Fab, its well-known laundry detergent.

Its 1987 spot, "Reverse Strip," though more humorous than provocative, is a far cry from its usual family-oriented laundryroom spots. It shows a young man—just out of bed—donning a pair of jeans to the Gypsy Rose Lee stripper tune. Despite the bare flesh, the ad had no trouble at any of the three networks.

HHCC wasn't that lucky—but then they had a lot more lust to See STEAM, Page 13

Suspended Swiss Bid Seen For U.K. Bank

By Warren Getler

International Heroid Tribune
LONDON — Shares of Hill
Samuel PLC, the merchant bank, were suspended Thesday pending an announcement Wednesday on its merger talks with Union Bank

Separately, Guinness Peat Group PLC, a conglomerate with merchant banking interests, said it had received notification of an imninent unwanted bid from a New Zealand-based company.

The suspension by the London Stock Exchange of Hill Samuel's shares, at the bank's request, led to speculation that Union Bank was about to unveil terms of a friendly amount to around £8.00 per share, or £738 million ($1.18 billion). Shares of Hill Samuel, which has been engaged in merger talks with Union Bank for over a month, were Suspended at 763 pence.

Analysts said that a formal offer on Wednesday could provoke a counterbid for Hill Samuel by another foreign-based bank. Morgan Stanley Group Inc., the U.S. investment bank, has been mentioned by market watchers. Guinness Peat said it would reject as "totally unacceptable" any offer that Equiticorp, a New Zealand-based company, was contem-

Equiticorp, which already owns 29.7 percent of Guinness Peat, informed Guinness Peat that it was planning to increase its holding. To increase the bid above 30 percent would require, in accordance with British regulations, launching a bid for the full company.

Guirmess Peat's chairman, Alastair Morton, said the Equiticorp bid would be for 110 peace a share, valuing the company at £321 mil-

Guinness Peat's shares closed at 103 pence on the London Stock Exchange Tuesday, but moved up to 110 in after-hours trading. The proposed increase in Equiticorp's stake, was "not welcome and not worthy of discussion," Mr.

Keeping Salmon Down on the Farm

Corralled Fish Spawn New Industry, but Snags Persist

By John F. Burns

HARDY ISLAND, British Columbia — As the sun disap-peared behind the mountains that line this spectacular coastline, John Spence grabbed a handful of herring meal and tossed it onto the gray waters of the Pacific. In an instant, hundreds of sleek silver salmon broke the surface in a graceful arc.

"Hungry fellows, coho," said Mr. Spence, whose company, Hardy Sea Farms Inc., feeds a million coho and Chinook salm on that it has corralled in nets off this rocky outpost

Next month, if all goes well, some of those salmon will begin a journey that will end on a din-ner table in homes and restaurants across the United States. Hardy Island is one of the newest sites of the fast-growing industry of salmon farming. Instead of sending men to sea in the smacks and seine boats that have traditionally brought salm-on to shore, Mr. Spence and his operations manager, Michael Mulholland, are raising the fish in offshore nets, fattening them for market just as farmers do cattle and hogs.

The industry of salmon farming migrated here from Norway, where it began 20 years ago. It has also been adopted in Ireland and Scotland, where traditionally salmon has been taken from oceans and rivers. In addition, it is developing off the Atlantic coast of the United States and Canada, and in Chile, Japan and New Zealand.

The industry's growth is part of the worldwide burgeoning of the ancient enterprise of aquaculture. Increasingly, demand for fish is outstripping what fishing can supply, and the gap is being filled with farmed fish.

From ponds in the Philippines to the vast lakes of Africa, specialists are using modern versions of techniques pioneered in China more than 2,000 years ago to provide a potentially unlimited source of protein. At the top end of the aquacul-tural scale are the salmon farmers, who can earn up to $50 for a single nine-pound (four kilogram) coho, of the kind produced at Hardy Sea Farms. Last vear, the worldwide output of farmed salmon was more than 77,000 tons (70,000 metric tons), about 10 percent of the total worldwide salmon catch.

But while the fishing industry is struggling to maintain produc-tion because of problems with overfishing and pollution, the salmon farming industry is predicting rapid growth, to more than 165,000 tons by 1990.

Yet to continue its growth, salmon farming must overcome the political muscle of commercial fishermen, the concerns of environmentalists, a number of fish diseases, and the attitude of demanding consumers who dis-dain the flavor of farmed fish. If the farming is successful, it could make millionaires of men like Mr. Spence, a former McGill University professor who recently resigned as a salmon farming adviser to the British Columbia government to take over as president of Hardy Sea Farms. The company is being watched closely throughout the industry, largely because it teams Mr

Spence, an authority on fish biology, with Thor Mowinckel, the Norwegian businessman who is widely regarded as the founder the salmon-farming industry in his home country.

Mr. Mowinckel's company, Saga Senfood A/S of Bergen, is the majority owner of Hardy Sea Farms, and he has already worked successfully with Mr. Spence in a salmon farm in County Donegal, Ireland. Saga Seafood is investing heavily here in the belief that there will be continuing rapid growth in the See SALMON, Page 13

Dollar Plunges On Jitters Over U.S. Trade Data

NEW YORK — The dollar plunged Tuesday in brisk New York and European trading, as dealers said market operators continued to react to last week's larger-than-expected $15.7 billion U.S. trade deficit for June.

Some dealers said the late response to Friday's announcement was due to demand for dollars to pay for $28 billion of U.S. Treasury securities auctioned last week.

Yet traders were surprised at the speed and extent of the slide, which at its worst knocked about 3 pfennigs and 3 yea off the U.S. currency from Monday's levels.

The speed of the dollar's decline was due mainly to its breaking crucial support levels at 149.20 year and 1.87 Deutsche marks. This prompted heavy liquidation of long dollar positions as well as dollar selling in the forward markets by foreign investors and securities houses eager to hedge their dollar portfolios, dealers said.

The overwhelming feeling is that the U.S. currency needs to fall further, analysts said, first to reflect the massive amounts of dollars that the trade deficit is sending overseas, and second, to actually improve the U.S. trade balance.

In New York, the dollar dipped just below 1.84 DM marks as mar-ket participants flocked to stop losses. But it bounced back as rumors of increased hostilities in the Gulf swept the market.

Subsequently, shipping agents from Lloyd's of London reported that a Liberian-registered merchant ship had been attacked by a small patrol boat firing missiles in the Gulf of Oman. The news was not major, but it was enough to spark short-covering," said a dealer at one U.S. bank. In New York, the dollar closed at 1.8435 Deutsche marks, down more than two-and-one-half ofennigs from 1.8705 at Monday's close; at 146.30 yen, down from 149.23; at 1.5305 Swiss francs, down from 1.5530 and at 6.1535 French francs, after 6.2550.

The fall against the French franc extended the decline from the Paris fix. At that afternoon setting, the dollar dropped to 6.1930 francs from 6.2695 on Monday, making a fall of more than 2 percent since the Friday fixing.

The dollar also sagged against the British pound in New York. which rose to close at $1.6150, against $1.5945. People have been thinking it should be at these levels for a long

British clearing bank. "Sentiment has swung against the dollar. This See DOLLAR, Page 13

Housing Starts In U.S. Climbed 0.9% in July

WASHINGTON - U.S. housing construction edged up 0.9 percent in July, the first monthly increase since February, the government reported Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said new homes and apartments were being built at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.61 million units last mouth. In June, construction had fallen 0.6 percent, after larger declines in the previous three months.

The weakness in housing starts has been attributed to an ncrease in mortgage rates.

After declining to a nine-year low of 9 percent in late March, fixed-rate mortgages surged up by almost 2 percentage points over the next eight weeks. Since ate May, rates have been falling again and now stand at 10.33 percent, according to a weekly survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. Analysts had predicted that rate decline would halt the drop in construction activity.

Housing permits, considered a good indication of future activity, declined 1.9 percent in July to an annual rate of 1.49 million units, the slowest annual pace since March 1983.

WASHINGTON — The World Bank said Tuesday that it placed loans to and guaranteed by Zambia and Sierra Leone on a non-accrual bank effectively confirming a cut-off of further credit to the two African nations.

The bank said it took the action — to include the interest in the international agency's accounts only when it is actually received — because debt service payments on some of these leans were now more than 180 days in arrears. Zambia, which owes $481 million to the World Bank, is $40.4 million in arrears, while Sierra Leone, which borrowed $9.8 million, is behind DM Futures Hudson 1987 2.315 73.9 9.24 1937 4.466 91.1 3.43 Collections of Pedic Intel will 1802 to 6 SEP 190 leader: High 1903 6 leaves: CBOE. Those problems, ranging from lost bags to disputes over pay scales and allegations of vandalism, began after Northwest' parent company, NWA Inc., acquired Republic Airlines for $884 million last year.

Northwest suffered losses in the first quarter of this year as a result of expenses related to the merger, but net profit in the secand quarter amounted to $50.6 million, more than double the $23.9 million in the same quarter a year earlier.

NWA's stock fell $1.125 Tues day to close at $70.25 on the New York Stock Exchange. Northwest's management has been dogged by problems as it attempts to meld work forces, routes and equipment into one of "It is an incredible mess," said one industry source.

Chargeurs Holds 24% Of Prouvost

PARIS - Chargeurs SA, the French industrial holding group, now holds 24.84 percent of the textile company Prouvost SA, the stockbrokers' association said

Chargeurs, which has interests in transportation, media and textiles, has increased its holding in Prouvost from 11.69 percent on Aug. 7.

Prouvost shares have been suspended temporarily from trading on the Bourse, the association said. Prouvost stock has traded heavily recently, with the price rising to a high of 489 francs ($77.50) on Monday from 337 francs on Aug. 7. On Tuesday the shares were trading at 424 francs when they were Prouvost's capital comprises just over five million shares of 50 francs nominal value, giving it a market value of about 2.12 billion francs. At least 62 percent of the company's stock is held, directly or indirectly through a holding company, by the two founding families. Prouvost and Lefèbvre. Industry sources estimated the cost of Chargeurs' purchase so far at just over 400 million francs and said Chargeurs was holding talks with Prouvost shareholders in the hope of further raising its stake.

Chargeurs' revenue in the clothing sector will account for about 1.5 billion francs in 1987 on total consolidated revenue of 10 billion to 11 billion, compared with 11.44 billion in 1986, the sources said. In the past year, Chargeurs has increased its operations in the textile sector. In June, it announced that it had acquired a 60 percent stake in the French company Textile Delcer. Other sources close to Prouvost confirmed that Chargeurs' chair-man, Jérôme Seydoux, had been in contact with Prouvost's president, Christian Derveloy, but said Char-geurs was not holding discussions with the textile group's sharehold-

The same sources said that Prouvost had been informed of Chargeurs' intentions and that some of Prouvost's shareholders had been buying up stock in an attempt to block the purchases. Pronvost recorded net attributable consolidated profit of 62.97 million francs in 1986.

Japanese Agency Reports Less Reliance on Exports

TOKYO - Japan has entered an era of restructuring its economy to depend less on exports, partly because of the yen's sharp rise, the Economic Planning Agency said Tuesday. The agency's white paper on the economy for the 1987 fiscal year continued Japan's pattern of calling in general terms for changes in the domestic economy while citing U.S. budget and trade deficits as more serious problems:

The eventual impact of the strong year's purchasing power would be higher living standards with lower consumer prices, increased leisure hours and improving housing conditions, said the white paper, which was approved Tuesday by the cabiner. The yen has risen more than 60 percent against the dollar in the past two years. The stronger yen has made Japanese goods more expensive abroad and pinched the economy. After a record high of $94.1 billion in fiscal 1986, which ended March 31, Japan's surplus in the current account, - measuring the trade in merchandise as well as in certain fees and services - had begun to shrink in the first quarter of calendar 1987, the report said. Yasuo Katsumura, director general of the EPA's Research Bureau, said at a news conference that Japan's gross national product, the total output of the nation's goods and services, grew by 2.6 percent in fiscal 1986, the lowest increase since an oil crisis reduced the GNP for the first time in fiscal 1974.

The government reported record unemployment of 3.0 percent.

SALMON: Farming of Prized Fish Spawns Industry Growth, Snags Persist

ic disease among marine life and its investment to exceed $10 mil-fresh fish to restaurants and homes, as opposed to the canneries that take the bulk of the salmon caught by wild fisheries.

The company bases its confidence partly on the reaction of Westerners to medical studies that found lower rates of heart disease in countries where people eat large amounts of fish. Westerners are consuming more fish themselves.

Also, the company says, there is a growing demand for a steady supply of fresh salmon year-round, a market that the wild fishery, with tightly-regulated fishing seasons, finds difficult to supply.

Starting next month, two years after it filled its first pen with smolts, or baby fish, Hardy Sea Farms will begin shipping salmon from here, 50 miles (80 kilometers) north of Vancouver, then on to customers in Canada and the United States. In its first "harvest," between now and next spring, it expects to market 360 tons of salmon, worth about $1.5 million, figures that it expects to rise to 990 tons and $7 million in 1988-89.

However, the company's success depends on its ability to overcome some major obstacles. Among these is the insistence of some foodlovers that fish caught at sea, typically after swimming thousands of miles in ocean currents, have a taste that no farmed fish can match. Beyond this, there is the hostility of commercial salmon fishermen hostility that has coalesced into a powerful political force in Alaska, where one of the world's largest salmon fishing fleets has so far blocked efforts to establish salmon that antibiotics used to keep the lion, with an annual production casalmon healthy could invade the food chain.

Mr. Spence believes that scientifically qualified managers, schooled in the problems that have caused failures elsewhere, can surmount these obstacles.

But as he waited for a float plane that took visitors on an aerial tour of the rival salmon farms that have established pens in virtually every inlet within 10 miles of Hardy Island, he acknowledged that the industry is still in the "high risk" category. "If you haven't debugged pacity of 6,600 tons.

More than 130 salmon farms have sprung up along this coast in the past three years, and at least 900 more lease applications are pending with the provincial gov-crument. Already, experts are talking of a potential harvest here of 22,000 tons of salmon by 1990. which would have a current market value of more than $100 million. The model for the industry is

Norway, where experimental ven-tures begun in 1968 have blossomed into an industry that markets 50,000 tons of salmon a year, I,100 tons a month to buyers in Boston and New York. Norway now has its emulators in Maine and New Brunswick, Canada, at farms that have a current output of about 1,650 tons. But, as Mr. Mowinck- an important role in the VW el's involvement here suggests, the group's assembly process and a fastest growth in the industry in North America is in the Pacific

Farms along Puget Sound in Washington, many of them Norwe-gian-owned, have an annual output of 660 tons. But pollution of the sound and the limited availability of deep, well-flushed seawater basins, essential to the salmon's health, have restricted growth. If the impasse in Alaska is broken, the industry could prosper rapidly there, but in the meantime most of the development is occurring here. "The coastal capacity of British Columbia is virtually unlimited," said Mr. Spence, motioning across Jervis Bay to the north, where thickly forested mountains slant steeply to a shoreline that cuts back and forth like sawteeth all the way to Alaska, 450 miles away. After the first batch of salmon has been marketed, the company hopes to attract fresh investment. One option is a joint venture with one of the leading companies in the marketing of frozen seafoods. Japanese companies with established interests in aquaculture at home have looked at the industry here, but so far have abstained from in-

'If your only criterion is a quick return on your money, this is not your business," Mr. Spence said.

T EE COTTEN'S reverent text to "The Elvis L Catalogue" recounts the now familiar facts of Presley's life in minute, nearly day-byday detail, but it really serves as an excuse to display pages and pages of Elvis memorabilia and collectibles — from fluffy Elvis Presiey hound dogs (value $50) and Elvis Presley sneakers (value $200) to Elvis cake decorations (value $3,000, if on original icing) and Elvis Presky board games (described as giving "girls the opportunity to play out their fantasies about falling in love with Elvis," value $150.)

There are objects that once belonged to the King (a vest worn by him in 1953 and 1954, lete with mustard stains, is said to be worth $7,500), objects he gave away (the gold and diamond ring he gave his mother is valued at $15,000), and objects that were licensed by his tireless promoter, Colonel Tom Parker, including charm bracelets, skirts, belts, Tshirts, pajamas, bolo ties, hats, purses, neck-laces and pencils.

"Elvis World" leaves the reader with a similar impression. "Strange as it seems," write:
Jane and Michael Stern, "Elvis the artist — deemed by the Smithsonian Institution to be the most important voice in the history of American music — is of limited importance in "Elvis World." Observe almost any gathering of devoted Elvisites. His music is played, but attention will likely focus more on the singer than on his songs.

Lavishly produced by Alfred A. Knopf, "El-vis World" is itself more of a collector's keepsake than a book in any conventional sense.

Bound in take gold leather with a pink and turquoise overleaf, the volume exudes a kittany sense of the 1950s and early '60s.

Compared with the shirty professionalism of the book's design, the text of "Elvis Works" seems amateurish, silly and sadly misconceived Mainly, it's a rebash of the singer shie. studded with bits of trivia.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP Cleveland here Monday night. The streak broke a tie with Ken Landreaux, who in 1980 hit in 31 straight games for Minnesota. Molitor dropped a perfect bunt toward third base and easily beat the throw by pitcher Scott Bailes to Molitor had been walked by Bailes to start the game. Robin Yount singled him to second, and after Glen Braggs hit into a double play, Molitor scored when center fielder Joe Carter dropped Rob Deer's fly at the wall for a three-base error. Juan Castillo led off the third with a single before Molitor dropped his bunt toward third baseman Brook Jacoby. "I take a look down there every at-bat. Some third basemen completely take that away from you," Molitor said of the first bunt hit of his streak. "Jacoby was about even with the bag. I figured if I could get Scotty to field the ball, that's a tough play for a left-hander." A forceout advanced Castillo, who scored on Braggs' sacrifice fly.

ST. GEORGE'S, Bernanda — Blind sailor Jim Dickson is a brave and remarkable man, but it's clear now his scheme to sail across the Atlantic alone is ill-timed and that he ought to reconsider.

Dickson was assisted into port for emergency repairs here Friday after electronic gear betrayed him 300 miles (486 kilometers) into his 2,800-mile journey from Portsmouth, Rhode Island, to Plymouth, England. The 41-year-old American wants to be the first blind person to make a solo trans-Atlantic crossing, and he may continue the journey late this week if repairs are complete and the weather cooperates.

Dickson claims he's after two things - to enjoy himself sailing and to demonstrate how independent handicapped people can be with the help of modern technology. So far he's managed neither, and the prognosis isn't good if he

His first 10 days at sea were the farthest thing from fun, Dickson admits, as he went from one bout of terror and anxiety to the next.

And if he demonstrated anything about equipment and independence, it's the capricious unreliability of modern technology under stress and his own reliance on others to get him through a crisis.

Dickson has been accepting congratulations for weathering a nasty storm and for navigating 350 miles to Bermuda after his satellite navigation system (SatNav) and automatic steering gave out four days into the voyage.

But the real story of how he got here after the electronics quit is one of muddling through with a lot of help from his Much of the time he was motoring, not sailing, as he was guided along a course by supporters on shore. His 36-foot (11-meter) sloop Eye Opener is equipped with an Argos automatic tracking device, which radioed his position to satellites passing overhead. After the Sat-Nav quit, he found out where he was by radio-telephoning supporters on shore who periodically dialed up the Argos information and advised Dickson which way to steer to

His radio advisers - particularly Paul Petronello of Tillotson-Pearson Yachts, which built and rigged Eye Opener - also tracked tropical storm Arlene and told Dickson how and when to batten down in preparation for

When the storm's 50-knot winds abated, Petronello, who by then had flown to Bermuda, boarded a pilot boat that went 28 miles to sea to intercept Eye Opener.

In the end, Petronello climbed into a small inflatable raft that was drifted out behind the pilot boat on a 100yard tether.

When the tiny raft came close enough in the turbulent seas, the pilot-boat skipper gunned his engine, the inflat-able banged alongside Eye Opener and Petronello jumped in - a tricky and dangerous maneuver.

But Dickson insisted Saturday that "it wasn't a rescue - this was how we planned to deal with it, and we did." One key problem that convinced Dickson to pull into Bermuda for repairs was the broken SatNav, which stopped giving audible signals to tell him where he was.

But in port, the man who fixed it said the problem was "operator error." Dickson had failed to dial the correct instructions into the equipment to get his audible signals, said electrician Mac McGrath.

If little of this sounds like an example of a handicapped person handling difficult physical, emotional and intellec-

Jim Dickson, greeted by his mother in Bermuda.

As bright and bold as Dickson is, he imperiled himself and his mission by storming out to sea ill-prepared. When he left Rhode Island, he never had been on the ocean alone in a boat before, never had weathered a storm, never tested or worked on much of the equipment he relied on and had only about 250 hours practice time on the boat.

It's now fairly clear that he's capable of proving what he set out to prove and achieving what he set out to achieve, if he'd just given himself time to master his equipment. But he didn't.

As veteran single-handed ocean racer Francis Stokes put it: "Whenever your preparations for going to sea are poor, the sea worms its way in and finds the problems." That it did, and when things broke or went awry, Dickson wasn't experienced enough to deal with them and had to Adaptability is the mark of a true seaman. For lack of experience. Dickson didn't have it.

His relative helplessness in the face of technical breakdowns and a moderately bad storm left him open to the criticisms that inevitably developed - most notably columnist William F. Buckley's assertion that the ocean was no place for a blind man to be, that Dickson should try something more suitable to his handicap, that it was a

Having sat with Dickson on his boat and watched him deftly scamper around the deck, having observed his quick grasp of matters nautical, I'm convinced that Buckley, who never met or even conversed with Dickson, is dead

With reasonable time and practice, sailing at the proper time of year, Dickson could take Eye Opener across the ocean with seamanlike skill and grace, making his point so effectively that even Buckley would have to concede it. But Dickson plunged in too fast.

If he chooses to continue this voyage, chances are he'll survive and could well make his destination. So many people are watching that the likelihood he'd be lost at sea s remote. He has a good boat that's proved its worth in

But the season is wrong. Stormy weather is coming, and Dickson should know by now that he needs more experience if he's going to sail well in hard conditions.

Stokes, a key member of the team that advised Dickson on whether or not to go and who gave a grudging go-ahead three weeks ago, said that "in retrospect, Jim was putting too much faith in all these [electronic] systems. There was a lot of wishful thinking.

"But it's a great thing to cross an ocean. It was not my business to stand in his way." Dickson should indeed cross his ocean, but should stand in his own way until he's ready to do it right. That would be next year, and no sooner.

A Nut Is a Nut Is a Nut

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — What the United States needs is a polite word meaning "right-wing nut." At present, you cannot call a right-wing nut "a right-wing nut." at least not in respectable intumals. least not in respectable journals.

To do so would be - in the jawbusting, pussyfooting lingo at suggestions that he has somehow Americans speak nowadays judgmental, pejorative and tenden-tious. Why this should make it taboo I don't know, since almost all political language is judgmental, tendentious and either pejorative or treacherous, but it is. The truth probably is that calling them "right-wing nuts" would hurt their feelings, and editors, who make the rules about things like this, tremble at the thought of being deluged by pained letters from right-wing nuts.

Whatever the reason, the term is verboten, and I regret having to use sly suggestion that we are talking it here and pray right-wing nuts about crackpots, screwballs and will understand and spare me their terrible letters.

At present, they are called "conservatives." These days, who isn't? Whatever conservatism may once have been, it has now been authoritatively redefined by Ronald Reagan. Are you finicky about political philosophy? Want to argue that Reaganism is actually a way-out-West form of populist radicalism? Don't strain your arguing glands. If Reagan can carry 49 states by calling it "conservatism," you'd be arguing with the famous 800-pound gorilla.

Conservatism is now whatever Ronald Reagan says it is. So what cable. about people so far to the right of Reagan that they have onsets of paranoin in which they believe the president is either betraying conservatism, or is about to?

At present, the editorially approved term for these people is conservatives." So we get incomprehensible stories out of Washington about "conservatives" fuming over White House hostility to their

This makes no sense. Since the president defines "conservatism," it is logically impossible for those in disagreement with his definition to be "conservatives."

Aware of this problem, some of our more sensitive explicators of politics try solving it by referring to these White House critics as "the right." This doesn't work, either.

The president would surely scoff become a centrist, a middle-of-theroader or a devotee of General Eisenhower's "moderate Republican-When applied to ism." Republicanism, "moderate" is probably a cuss word in the presi-

If Ronald Reagan represents "the right," then the crowd to his right might sensibly be called "the far right." Sense isn't good enough here, though. The word "far" bothers too many people when applied to politics.

"Far" contains more than just a yes, nuts. People who are "far out." You always find a few far-out peo-ple in politics. They are either on "the far left" or "the far right."

Most of the far right probably would rather be called "right-wing nuts" than "the far right," and for obvious reasons. Right-wing nuts get elected all over the United States. You can see two or three almost every evening on the TV

Even worse than "the far right" would be "right-wing extremists." Americans hate "extremists" of all varieties. "Left-wing extremists," "right-wing extremists," "moderate extremists" — Americans make no distinction. "Extremists" are despi-

Which leaves the "right-wingnut" problem still unsolved. As Senate leader in the 1950s, Lyndon B. Johnson had a similar nomen clature problem with the "far-out" Democrats who constantly attacked him for betraying the cause

The heated passion with which they abused him for not pushing their programs to inevitable defeat in Congress gave Johnson the idea for a name, and he called them "the red-hots." I'd suggest it now as a nice synonym for "right-wing nuts," but the word "red" might send them right off the scope.

Carrie Fisher: Back From Life's Edge

By Michael Gross New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Carrie Fisher prowled her room at the Ritz-Carlton. She sipped a 7 Up, curled up briefly on the couch, bounced into the bathroom to fuss with her hair for the fourth time in 10 minutes and then returned, sipping a glass

Throughout, the 30-year-old actress kept up a monologue on the travails of her new career as an author. Her first novel, "Post-cards From the Edge" (Simon & Schuster), has just been published. It is a series of vignettes, at once harrowing and hilarious, describing an obsessive young movie star's recovery from drug addiction.

Two years ago. Fisher — whose films include "Shampoo," which began her career at age 16; the "Star Wars" series, and "Hannah and Her Sisters" — was in a drug rehabilitation clinic. She had taken an overdose of prescription drugs. Drugs, both legal and illegal, had fueled her 12year tear down celebrity's fast lane.

On a phone-in show a caller had com pared her to Oliver North, asserting that both were cashing in on illegal activities.
"Me and Ollie North!" she exclaimed. "Usually, it's me and Debbie and Eddie and Belushi and Paul."

That's Debbie Reynolds, Fisher's mother; Eddie Fisher, her father, a recovered drug abuser himself, who left home when she was a child; John Belushi, the comic actor, who clowned alongside Fisher on "Saturday Night Live" and in the film "The Blues Brothers" before dying of a drug overdose, and Paul Simon, the singer who was Fisher's companion for seven years and her husband for nine months.

With a background like that ("The norm was nuts," she said), it is not surprising that in Fisher's book the main character is described as "more of a personality than a person." She also created a secondary character who leaves a drug rehabilitation clinic with the idea for a movie called "Re-

Fisher came away from the drug clinic with the raw material for "Postcards From the Edge." She had written "pretentious poetry" as a teen-ager, she said, and had always been quick with one-liners. So when she was asked by a publisher to write a funny non-fiction book, it quickly evolved into something else.

"The tone of those books is snide, as if you're above what you're writing about," she said. She thought of writing a how-to stuff I didn't want to make fun of." Then she read a Dorothy Parker story about an alcoholic's disintegration and realized she could write something similar about drug abuse, "It was an extreme situation I made funny to myself while going through it. That's when I need humor: when there's nothing funny. I was in the worst place I could be and not be dead."

Fisher ended up as a sort of Betty Ford for the "Star Wars" generation. She made the decision to write about her experience in the clinic because, she said, she was unwilling to write about Debbie and Eddie and Belushi and Paul. "I'm too young. My memory isn't good enough. I don't know if I have insight into other people. Books on star parents tend to make the child a victim. I don't want to write a book like that. I don't want to embarrass people I know. So what do you write about?"

A character in the novel describes herself as "too old to be in the Brat Pack and too young for my own exercise tape." Fisher, book on celebrity memoirs and calling it 30, considers herself "a part of whichever "Money Dearest." "But it made fun of generation claims me. I'm just like other to drugs, but if you look romance up in the people, only more so. You live faster. You get there sooner. It was as good as it could get when I was born. I was world-weary at 20. I had unlimited access, money, fame and acceptance. I was accepted by my heroes before I could imagine what I'd say if I met them. "How could I have felt I'd worked hard enough to achieve that? Something was ng. Something was off. I was never comfortable. Maybe that's what drugs did for me. Why drugs? They were there. I wanted to be accepted by people who did drugs. I thought I was too excited. I had this energy. Call it manic. Drugs put me where I perceived everyone else to be. They

She laughed. "They made me comatose. Eventually, they eroded whatever coping skill I had. I let the drugs do the walking. The scariest thing Behishi ever said to me was, 'You're like me.' And then he died."

What they had in common was a fascination with "the allure of the flame," she said. "No matter how bad you've been burned, it's not enough. There is a romance

Nowadays, Fisher says she is founded in the reality of sobriety and of a new life as an author.

To celebrate that new career, Joni Evans, president of the trade division of Simon & Schuster, gave a party for Fisher in her Olympic Tower spartment, where Fisher mixed, a little uneasily, with publishing executives and such guests as Chris Sarandon, the actor, Mike Nichols, the director, who plans to film Fisher's screenplay for "Postcards From the Edge," and Paul Simon's brother. Another Eddie was there: Fisher's father. It was his 59th birthday, and despite her nervousness about book promotions and the party, Fisher had remembered to buy him a present: a washed-silk jacket and pants, which she gave him when be

Garbo's '33 Duesenberg To Be Sold for Museum

Greta Garbo's 1933 Duesenberg could be driven away by a buyer willing to plunk down $2 million at an auction to benefit a museum in New York The auction also will feature the auto for the movie "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang," auction officials said. The New York philanthropisi Charles Wood donated the Duesenberg to the Hyde Collection museum in Glens Falls, New York. The car will be and New York. The can amusement park in tioned off at an amusement park in Lake George. The car, custom-made for Garbo in Paris, recently was refurbished for $125,000, the auctioneer Dean Kruse Said. The Duesenberg is rumored to have eight hidden compartments where the Hollywood starlet stashed her gems. It also is equipped with a drop-down makeup credenza with mirrors. Wood purchased the car in 1972 for $90,000. "It gets terrible gas mileage he said. The Chitty Chitty Bang Bang Car, constructed in 1966-68, has a boat-like back. "It doesn't fly and doesn't float, but is is still fully functional," a museum spokesman said.

These jazz guys can be pretty loose, but not showing up was going a bit too far. That's what one Wolf Trap Farm Park official said about the pianist Oscar Peterson not showing up for his Sunday night performance at the performing arts center in suburban Washing arts center in subutoan water-ington. It was a double blow to jazz, fans since the singer Ella Fitzgerals had been forced to cancel earlies because of a foot infection. Carnel McRae had rushed to Wolf Trap to substitute for Fitzgerald. After McRae performed, an announcer explained with obvious irritation in his voice that the audience of 4,000 could have their money back since Peterson had not shown up.

Homa Staller, Italy's sex-star pol-itician, is finding it hard to get work after hitting the headlines with her election to parliament in June, the newspaper La Repubb-lica said. La Repubblica said fame had boomeranged on the porno star and nightchub after nightchub had canceled shows because they did not want the publicity. "That's the price of popularity." La Repubblica said. "Her fans wanted to make a porno star a deputy but Italy is stopping a deputy from being a porno star."
